

EDU 5990 - Doctoral Dissertation Seminar
Professor Korynne Taylor-Dunlop

This culminating course brought together all the expectations of the portfolio, the proposal, as well as the dissertation process. Professor Dunlop eloquently walked us through all components using a combination of guest speakers, small group work, individual work, as well as working with the entire cohort. In one of the exercises, individually we drew a visual representation of the methodology of what we desired our dissertation topic to be. This was presented individually to the cohort who in return critiqued it and provided us with constructive feedback in regards to the clarity of our topic.

The guest speakers were awe-inspiring as they walked us through their own journeys with the process we are now approaching. Their real life stories helped solidify the process and encourage us that this can be accomplished.

With the help of this class, a much clearer understanding about the dissertation process is now held by all.
